A Story by Jeff Clausen

I used to know this guy from back home who had more money than sense. At least he spent his money wisely though. He bought a cabin up in Minnesota so he could spend his summers by the lake and fish every day. He also owned a very nice Cessna 182 which he used to fly all over the country. He kept it at the airport about 20 miles away from his cabin on the lake. Well, he soon tired of the long drive back and forth from his cabin to the airport so he got his seaplane rating and had floats installed on the Cessna 182.

On the very next trip he flew right on over the lake and set up for a landing at the airport. As he turned on his final approach his wife woke up and shrieked "are you nuts? You'll tear the plane up trying to land on the runway with your floats on".

He was startled at his wife's comment and he abruptly pulled up narrowly missing a certain crash landing. He flew on over to the lake and made a nice landing on the water. As he sat there visibly shaken, he told his wife "that's the dumbest thing I have ever done". With that he opened the door and jumped out, promptly falling into the lake.
